ACADEMIC ASSESSMENT REPORT (2022-23)

POLITICAL SCIENCE M.A. PROGRAM

ACADEMIC ASSESSMENT PLAN WITH REPORTED OUTCOMES

WILLIAM SCHRECKHISE, CHAIR

DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE

428 MAIN | University of Arkansas | Fayetteville, AR 72701

Program Goals of the Master of Arts in Political Science

The Master of Arts (M.A.) in Political Science is a 36-hour, two-year degree program offered by the Political Science (PLSC) Department. The department also offers a J.D./M.A. dual degree program with the University of Arkansas Law School.

Currently, the PLSC M.A. program offers graduate-level courses in three subfields: (1) American Politics, (2) Comparative Politics, and (3) International Relations.

All PLSC M.A. students are required to take the following three core courses focusing on political methodology and public policy theory.

- PLSC 5913: Research Methods in Political Science
- PLSC 5943: Advanced Research Methods in Political Science
- PLSC 5163: Public Policy

In addition, all PLSC M.A. students are required to take three of the following four subfield-specific seminars depending on their primary area of study.

- PLSC 5203: Seminar in American Political Institutions
- PLSC 5213: Seminar in American Political Behavior
- PLSC 5503: Comparative Political Analysis
- PLSC 5803: Seminar in International Politics

Upon completion of additional coursework relevant to their primary area of study, all PLSC M.A. students must either (1) complete six hours of thesis credit and defend the thesis or (2) pass a written comprehensive examination to graduate.

At the end of their program, students should be able to:

- acquire a general knowledge about theoretical, methodological, topical trends in political science. (Goal 1)
- apply that knowledge to specific policy or political contexts by employing relevant theory and empirical evidence. (Goal 2)
- understand global trends in areas such as governance and political economy, as well as complex policy issues involving gender, race, and ethnicity. (Goal 3)
- conduct independent research and communicate the results effectively in both oral and written form. (Goal 4)

Evaluating Student Learning Outcomes

We evaluate said program goals and related student learning outcomes by:

- assessing students' performance on an array of assignments such as writing assignments, presentations, and examinations.
- providing a rigorous assessment of students' work performed in internships and other experiential assignments, preferably by seeking feedback from clients with whom they interned.

- having students demonstrate their writing and analytical capabilities through the successful completion of a thesis, research/conference paper or a comprehensive examination that is reviewed critically by a committee of faculty members.

The following are examples of processes used to determine student competency aligned with those goals and learning outcomes.

- Goal 1 can be assessed by introductory level required graduate courses that provide students with a general knowledge of the literature in these fields (e.g., PLSC 5203, PLSC 5213, PLSC 5163, PLSC 5503, PLSC 5803). Given the breadth of student intellectual and academic backgrounds, we examine how students develop capabilities to critically assess materials that expose them to complex policy or political issues. The faculty use literature reviews, research papers and examinations in these courses to assess student progress. Moreover, faculty can assist students by identifying knowledge or methodological deficiencies early in their course of study when they can be more readily rectified.
- Goal 2 can be assessed in courses that are specifically designed to enhance the student's methodological knowledge and their qualitative and quantitative data analysis abilities (PLSC 5913, PLSC 5943). Students are directed to appropriate courses for their fields as well as courses in which skills overlap across political science subfields. The faculty members are able to assess this knowledge through literature review essays and research papers, quantitative and qualitative data sets, or other applied research with which the faculty member may be involved.
- Goal 3 can be assessed in our international relations and comparative politics classes in political science or international affairs classes in other departments as appropriate. Faculty members assess students' understanding of these issues in the quality of their research papers or applied projects that test their ability to use their knowledge in specific policy or political arenas.
- Goal 4 can be most readily assessed when students participate in internships or other experiential assignments that bring them in contact with institutions and organizations they analyzed in their academic readings. Students also can meet this goal through their classroom participation/presentations, conference participation/presentations, and other relevant scholarly activities.

Assessment Results and Improvement Plans

We discuss assessment results and improvement plans in the following while focusing on (1) retention and timely graduation, (2) curriculum, and (3) career preparation.

1. Retention and Timely Graduation

The retention and timely graduation of students is not a direct outcome measure that is linked to the program goals and learning outcomes we discussed earlier. However, it still is a meaningful indicator for evaluating how successful this program was in achieving those stated goals and learning outcomes.

Assessment Results

Most students in the PLSC M.A. program graduate in a timely manner, demonstrating their dedication and commitment to their studies. However, a small number of students may face certain challenges that delay their graduation. For instance, some students find it challenging to catch up with the rigorous coursework due to personal circumstances or unforeseen events. Additionally, a few students, while completing their coursework on time, may choose to postpone their thesis defense or comprehensive exam for various reasons such as pursuing off-campus full-time job opportunities, prioritizing responsibilities such as marriage or childcare, or navigating professional commitments. Despite these obstacles, the PLSC M.A. program remains supportive and understanding, providing necessary resources and guidance to ensure that all students can successfully complete their academic journey.

Improvement Plans

The following are some of the improvement plans that we have considered.

- We plan to improve recruitment efforts to attract more and better students with diverse backgrounds, while partnering with community organizations, investing marketing and outreach efforts, and offering more attractive financial aid packages.
- We plan to conduct more rigorous assessment of the student's performance in the first semester while working with graduate faculty who teach core required courses.
- We plan to improve academic/career coaching to better familiarize students with the qualifications required for their specific career path so that students can better align their learning goals/outcomes with their career goals.
- We plan to take early intervention with students struggling with their coursework and off-campus responsibilities, which can help them get back on track and avoid falling behind.
- We plan to attend major political science association meetings, such as APSA (American Political Science Association) or MPSA (Midwest Political Science Association), where we can connect with other M.A. programs. This will allow us to broaden our knowledge and gain valuable insights in this field.

2. Curriculum

The curriculum is an integral part of the effective and efficient graduate education. It is important that our existing curriculum meets the program goals and the needs of our students. We regularly review our courses to ensure that they are up-to-date and relevant to the career goals of our students.

Assessment Results

Many of the required courses in American Politics, International Relations, Comparative Politics, Public Policy, and Research Methods are taught by highly experienced faculty members. The course contents and instructional approaches are both robust and rigorous. As a result, students, in general, achieve commendable learning outcomes as they pertain to the program's stated goals discussed earlier. One issue the program faces, however, is that, due to its relatively small cohort size, we cannot offer a diverse range of elective courses to meet each student's specific needs. As such, students must often enroll in independent studies or some courses outside the department to complete their degree requirements. This is not an ideal situation, but we are currently working on it.

Improvement Plans

These issues are being addressed and improvement plans are in place, as follows.

- We recently added more courses in politics of international law and southern politics, but we should continue diversifying our elective courses. This will allow our students to explore new areas of interest and develop the skills they need to succeed in their chosen field.
- We hired two new tenure track assistant professors in Latino Politics and International Relations. This will undoubtedly help us offer more PLSC M.A. graduate courses in the future. Furthermore, adding one more tenure track faculty member in International Relations/Comparative Politics will greatly contribute to this endeavor.
- We intend to expand the number of PLSC M.A. students in our program. By doing so, we can ensure that enrollment numbers stay high even when more graduate courses are offered.
- Relatedly, we are working on increasing our visibility and marketing efforts to reach a wider pool of potential applicants. We will also continue to increase awareness of the J.D./M.A. dual degree program while closely working with the UA Law School. This dual program allows our students to earn two graduate degrees in a shorter time frame than if they pursued each degree separately.
- We plan to participate in primary political science association conferences, including APSA (American Political Science Association) and MPSA (Midwest Political Science Association), to establish connections with other M.A. programs. This will enable us to expand our knowledge and acquire invaluable insights in this field.

3. Career Preparation

Career preparation is a critical aspect of graduate education. To that end, the PLSC M.A. program is committed to helping its students succeed in their chosen careers. Career preparation is not just an important aspect but a crucial one when it comes to graduate education. Understanding the significance of this, the PLSC M.A. program is fully dedicated to providing comprehensive support to its students, ensuring their success in their chosen careers.

Assessment Results

We encourage students to take advantage of internships and opportunities to present their work at professional conferences. The Graduate School and the PLSC department fund students to present their work at a reputable conference. Also, the department continues to invest in technology for our students and faculty members collaborating with them. As a result, a significant number of students take an internship with reputable organizations and/or present their research at major research conferences while working with their graduate faculty mentors. All these efforts are expected to contribute to better student learning outcomes and job placement.

Improvement Plans

- We will continue to enhance student participation in internships, particularly among those who are actively preparing to enter the workforce immediately after graduation. By fostering meaningful connections between students and relevant organizations, providing valuable hands-on experiences, and offering guidance on career development, we plan to empower our students with the skills and confidence needed to succeed in their chosen fields.
- Relatedly, we plan to further strengthen and broaden our relationship with our community partners. By fostering deeper collaborations and actively engaging with our community partners, we aim to create an even wider range of career opportunities for our students.

- We will continue to improve the quality of our graduate students' paper presentations at major academic conferences. To achieve this, we will continue to foster meaningful collaborations between our graduate students and the graduate faculty. By facilitating this collaborative environment, we aim to provide our students with valuable guidance, mentorship, and expertise, enabling them to deliver outstanding presentations that contribute to their academic and professional growth.
- We will continue to enhance our alumni relations to foster a strong and enduring connection with our program. By engaging our alumni, we aim to create a vibrant community that actively supports our students and contributes to their success. Through various initiatives and opportunities, we will seek to cultivate lifelong relationships and ensure that our alumni remain an integral part of our program development.
- We plan to participate in prominent political science association meetings, such as APSA (American Political Science Association) and MPSA (Midwest Political Science Association), to establish connections with other M.A. programs. Through this, we aim to expand our knowledge and acquire valuable insights in this field.
